Squares with skulls contain no letters.

Shield symbols in the grid identify all intersections. The striped shield indicates the only intersection of a weapon and its rightful owner.

Squares with bloody splotches all contain letters which, read top-to-bottom, reveal the specific instrument of the Lion's victims' demise.
